Making college presidents more visible

Last week I wrote in this column about the relationship between administrators (mainly presidents) and the voters who elect them. It is a relationship that has gone on for decades and is part of the public’s view of higher education. How many institutions of higher education can you name off the top of your head? Perhaps a few from your own college or university, but what about institutions outside of your immediate area? According to the Carnegie Foundation, there are at least 5,000 institutions of higher education across the United States, grouped into 35 categories. To that end, the board of directors serves as the leadership position that includes – but is not limited to – the chief executive officer, the president, and the board members. If cultural features are called chancellors. The President will have the task of ensuring that the organization’s strategic plans are in place and that the organization is run efficiently and effectively.
