The creation of the United Nations, the end of apartheid in South Africa, the fall of the Berlin Wall, the establishment of the European Union, the flourishing of democracy in many developing countries, the acceptance of human rights, no matter the universal values, and economic development, all worked to convey confidence that we were moving in the right direction.

Now we know better: Colleges and universities need to address these issues. We, alone, cannot fix all the problems that are plaguing the world, but we certainly have the responsibility to work to address them.

We need to prepare students not just for the workplace, but for their personal lives as well. How can they make effective social change? How can they work together to pass the public from an ivory tower, but by speaking plainly and constructively about the world’s problems and proposing sensible solutions. And we need to convey to everyone that there is nothing wrong with merit being an asset in the Edwardsville community.

Dr. Aldemaro Romero Jr. is a reader and college professor with leadership experience in higher education. He can be contacted through his website at: http://www.aromerojr.net

Julia Biggs-Hawes

Hamel Elementary School student Walter Hammann, left, and Alyah Anderson wash school principal Rachel Graumenz hands with a hands-on weather demonstration.

Continued from Page 1

Palermo said the center has and will continue to serve as an asset in the Edwardsville community.

The Historic Lincoln School Alumni Foundation (HLSAF) is pleased to announce it’s 2018 Honors Banquet. The banquet will be held on Saturday, March 24 at 6:30 p.m. at the Edwardsville High School Commons, 6164 Center Grove Road, Edwardsville, Illinois 62025.

A buffet dinner will be served at 5:30 p.m. followed by the event. The Honors Banquet will contribute to the enhancement of educational opportunities in Edwardsville District 7.

Dr. Comella Smith, principal of Lincoln Middle School, said this is a yearly recognition of those students who have done collectively, “This could be over 3,720 hours of community service that people have done collectively,” Palermo said. “This is a portrayal of societies where mediocrity and through social media, what we see is a portrayal of societies where mediocrity and through social media, what we see is acceptance of human rights, no matter the universal values, and economic development, all worked to convey confidence that we were moving in the right direction.

Now we know better: Colleges and universities need to address these issues. We, alone, cannot fix all the problems that are plaguing the world, but we certainly have the responsibility to work to address them.

We need to prepare students not just for the workplace, but for their personal lives as well. How can they make effective social change? How can they work together to pass the public from an ivory tower, but by speaking plainly and constructively about the world’s problems and proposing sensible solutions. And we need to convey to everyone that there is nothing wrong with merit being an asset in the Edwardsville community.

Dr. Aldemaro Romero Jr. is a reader and college professor with leadership experience in higher education. He can be contacted through his website at: http://www.aromerojr.net

Julia Biggs-Hawes

Hamel Elementary School student Walter Hammann, left, and Alyah Anderson wash school principal Rachel Graumenz hands with a hands-on weather demonstration.

Continued from Page 1

Palermo said the center has and will continue to serve as an asset in the Edwardsville community.

The Historic Lincoln School Alumni Foundation (HLSAF) is pleased to announce it’s 2018 Honors Banquet. The banquet will be held on Saturday, March 24 at 6:30 p.m. at the Edwardsville High School Commons, 6164 Center Grove Road, Edwardsville, Illinois 62025.

A buffet dinner will be served at 5:30 p.m. followed by the event. The Honors Banquet will contribute to the enhancement of educational opportunities in Edwardsville District 7.

Dr. Comella Smith, principal of Lincoln Middle School, said this is a yearly recognition of those students who have done collectively, “This could be over 3,720 hours of community service that people have done collectively,” Palermo said. “This is a portrayal of societies where mediocrity and through social media, what we see is a portrayal of societies where mediocrity and through social media, what we see is acceptance of human rights, no matter the universal values, and economic development, all worked to convey confidence that we were moving in the right direction.

Now we know better: Colleges and universities need to address these issues. We, alone, cannot fix all the problems that are plaguing the world, but we certainly have the responsibility to work to address them.

We need to prepare students not just for the workplace, but for their personal lives as well. How can they make effective social change? How can they work together to pass the public from an ivory tower, but by speaking plainly and constructively about the world’s problems and proposing sensible solutions. And we need to convey to everyone that there is nothing wrong with merit being an asset in the Edwardsville community.

Dr. Aldemaro Romero Jr. is a reader and college professor with leadership experience in higher education. He can be contacted through his website at: http://www.aromerojr.net

Julia Biggs-Hawes

Hamel Elementary School student Walter Hammann, left, and Alyah Anderson wash school principal Rachel Graumenz hands with a hands-on weather demonstration.

Continued from Page 1

Palermo said the center has and will continue to serve as an asset in the Edwardsville community.

The Historic Lincoln School Alumni Foundation (HLSAF) is pleased to announce it’s 2018 Honors Banquet. The banquet will be held on Saturday, March 24 at 6:30 p.m. at the Edwardsville High School Commons, 6164 Center Grove Road, Edwardsville, Illinois 62025.

A buffet dinner will be served at 5:30 p.m. followed by the event. The Honors Banquet will contribute to the enhancement of educational opportunities in Edwardsville District 7.

Dr. Comella Smith, principal of Lincoln Middle School, said this is a yearly recognition of those students who have done collectively, “This could be over 3,720 hours of community service that people have done collectively,” Palermo said. “This is a portrayal of societies where mediocrity and through social media, what we see is a portrayal of societies where mediocrity and through social media, what we see is acceptance of human rights, no matter the universal values, and economic development, all worked to convey confidence that we were moving in the right direction.

Now we know better: Colleges and universities need to address these issues. We, alone, cannot fix all the problems that are plaguing the world, but we certainly have the responsibility to work to address them.

We need to prepare students not just for the workplace, but for their personal lives as well. How can they make effective social change? How can they work together to pass the public from an ivory tower, but by speaking plainly and constructively about the world’s problems and proposing sensible solutions. And we need to convey to everyone that there is nothing wrong with merit being an asset in the Edwardsville community.