

Creativity: The Common Ground between Arts and Sciences

10:00 AM - 11:15 AM

Sat Nov 17, 2018

📍 Sheffield, 4th Floor

Paired Theory and Practice

📖 Description

Throughout history there have been many commonalities between the arts and the sciences. Each set of disciplines have benefitted from each other. However, in these times of hyperspecialization, the connection between the two seems to have been lost. That is a bad sign, given that today's problems are more and more complex and require approaches that can benefit from different perspectives and experiences. We will present cases in which arts benefited from sciences and sciences benefitted from the arts, of people who were both artists and scientists, and how we need to approach the creation of bridges between the two by remembering that creativity is the sinew that has always held them together.

🗣️ Speakers

Steve Peters

Dean, College of Fine Arts, Univ. of Montevallo

Aldemaro Romero

Dean, Weissman School of Arts and Sciences, Baruch College

Jeffrey Bodwin

Dean, Minnesota State University Moorhead - College of Science, Health and the Environment